71

people removed in 22 months

Between 1 October 2024 and 5 August 2026, ICE recorded 71 departures of Belarusian citizens from the United States.

53

had no criminal record at all

ICE itself files them under its lowest criminality level, “Other Immigration Violator”: no conviction, no charge pending.

left without a final order from a judge

They left through routes that never reach a decision by an immigration judge, so no judge ever weighed their case on its merits.

41

were sent to a third country

Not back to Belarus, but to another country — what ICE's own data calls a third-country removal.

7

were children

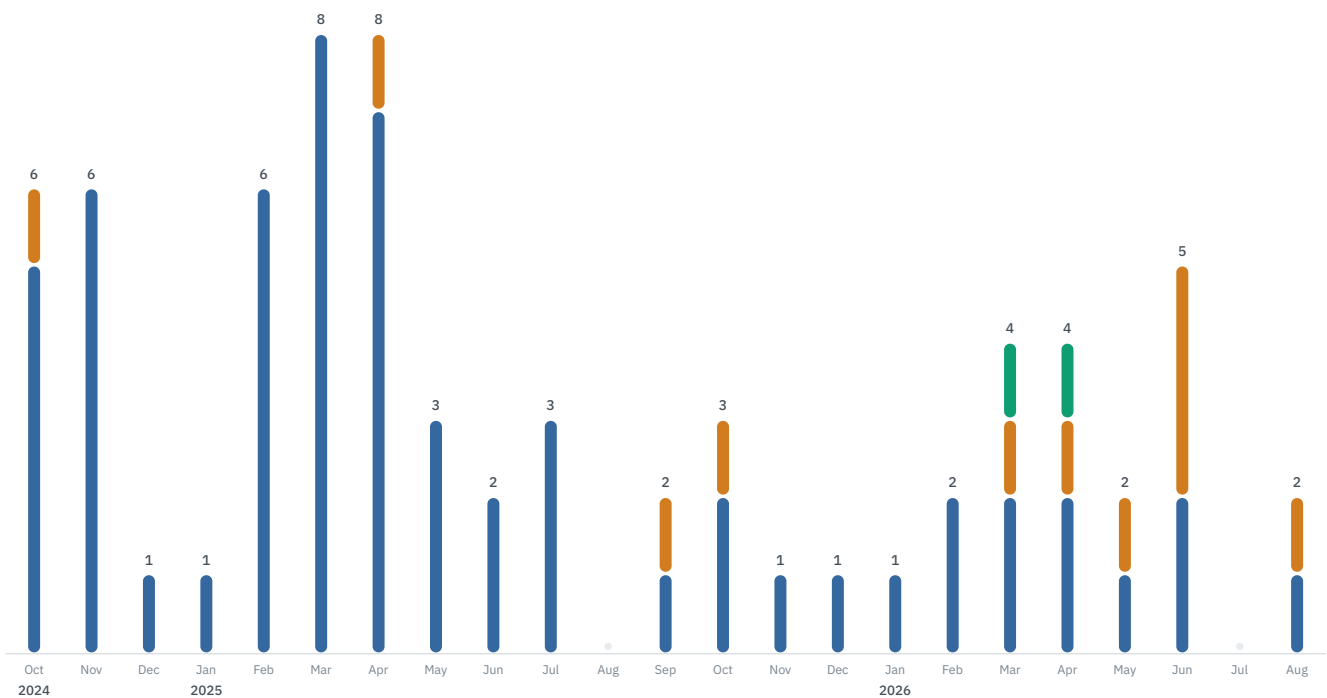

Seven of those removed were under 18 on the day of departure. The youngest was three years old.

597

days — the median case

Just under twenty months from the day ICE or CBP took a person in to the day they left the country.

Departures by month, split by type. The record opens on 1 October 2024, the first day of the ICE fiscal year 2025, and ends on 5 August 2026, the last day in the extract.

Every case in the data carries an outcome in the Case Status field. It shows whether the state removed the person, or the person left on their own under an order to go.

Type of departure

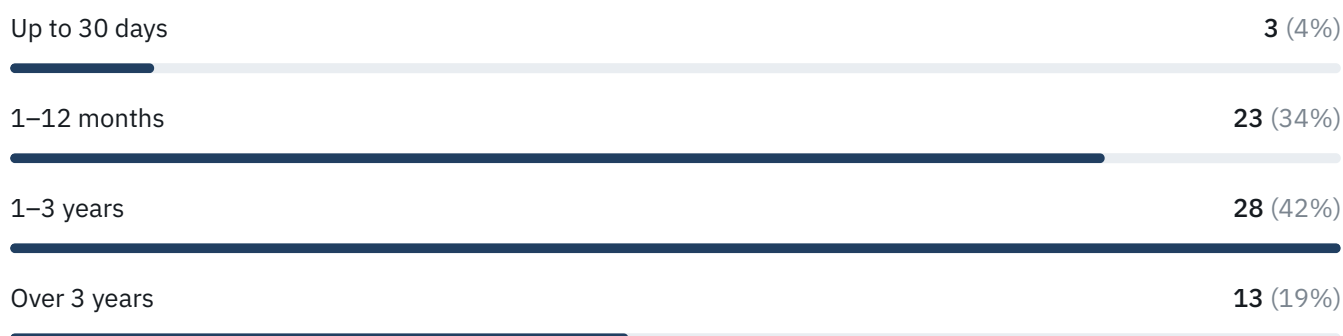

Did an immigration judge issue a final order?

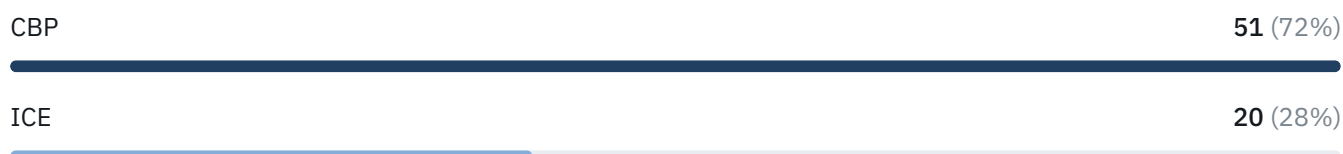

A removal without a final order is not unlawful — expedited removal and voluntary departure are designed to work that way. It does mean no judge weighed the case on its merits.

Time from last apprehension to departure

Measured between the Apprehension Date and the Departed Date. This is the length of the case, not necessarily time spent in detention — some people were released and later taken back into custody. Four records carry no apprehension date.

Who made the arrest

The Departure Country field records the country the person was flown to. It does not prove that country was the final destination — some may have been transit points — but where it differs from the person's citizenship, the Deportation Data Project counts it as a third-country removal.

● Withdrawal of application 2

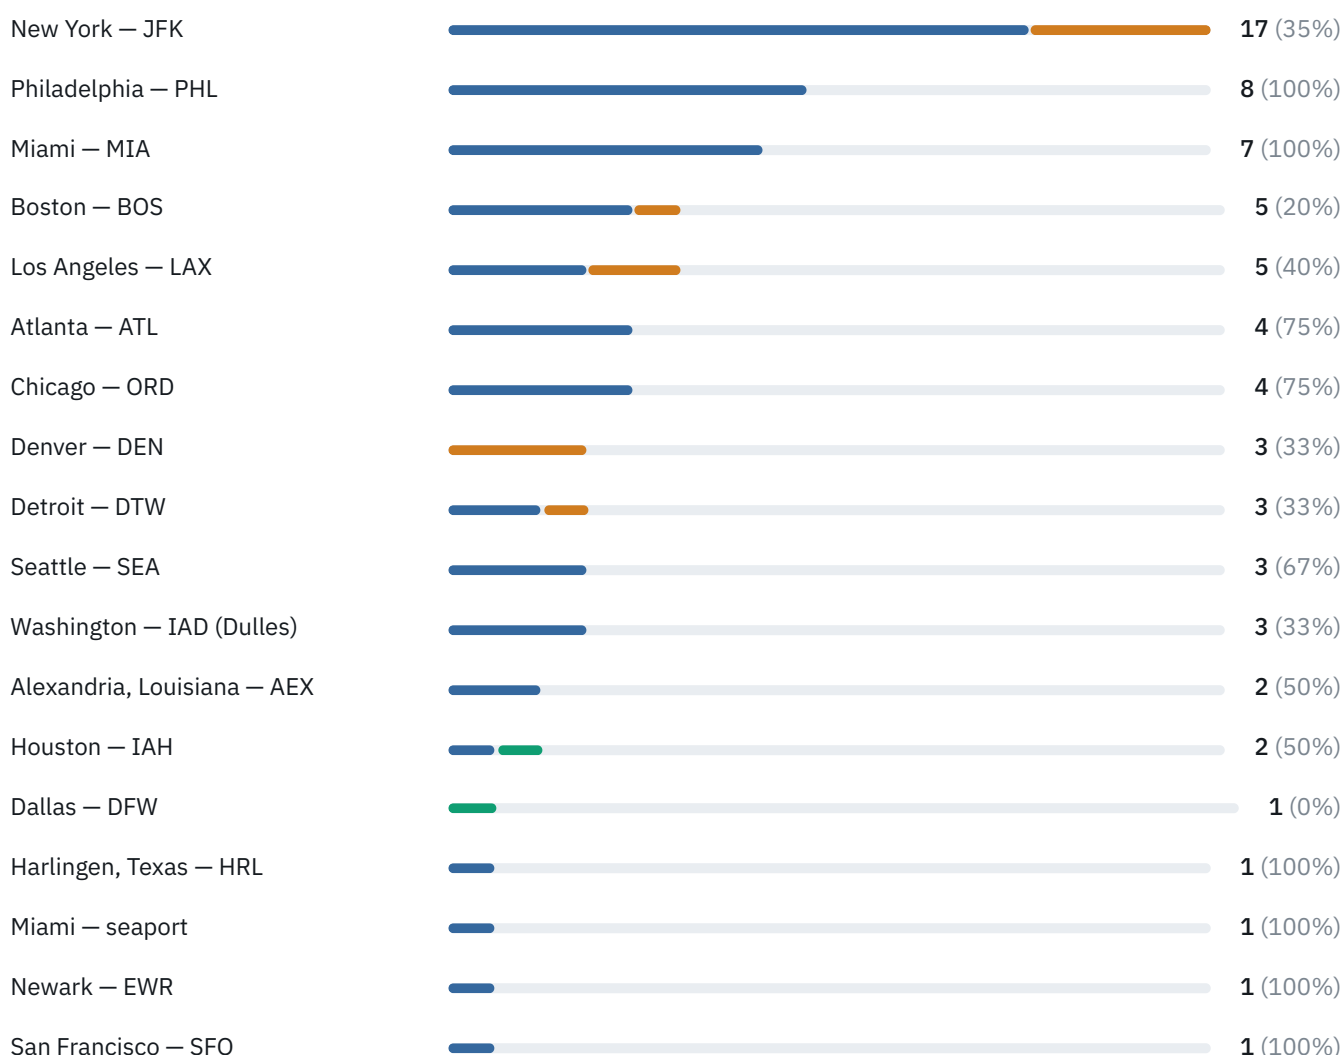

Türkiye alone accounts for 21 of the 41 third-country removals, and departures for Türkiye left from twelve different US airports — this is a standing route, not a single charter.

Eighteen ports of departure appear in the records. The ICE field spells the same airport several different ways; the names below are normalised, with the original string kept in the underlying dataset.

Ports of departure

Bar length is the number of departures; the figure on the right is the share sent to a third country rather than to Belarus.

Two ports stand out for reasons that are not about volume. Alexandria, Louisiana is not a commercial airport but a staging base for ICE Air charter flights. And one departure was not a flight at all: a woman was removed by sea from the port of Miami, to the Marshall Islands.
